Summary

The National Immigration Service says it is joining the national security operation for the November patriotic holidays, with reinforced surveillance and control across the country while thousands travel.

Details (summary of the article)

Panama's National Immigration Service announced it has joined the nationwide security operation for the patriotic holiday season, working with other state security bodies to strengthen surveillance and control throughout the country. With thousands of people travelling during the commemorative dates, immigration staff will be deployed to keep the movement of people orderly and safe. The institution says the aim is to protect both residents and visitors to Panama during the festivities. It framed the deployment as part of a joint inter-institutional effort so the celebrations pass calmly and safely. Travellers in Chiriquí can therefore expect more document checks and official presence on the roads during early November.
