Full text (English)

Portafolio.co reports on Boquete, the Panamanian highland town in Chiriqui, as a place where buying or renting a home can cost up to about 30% less than in Panama City. The piece highlights the cool climate, coffee-growing landscape and established foreign-resident community as drivers of interest from retirees and remote workers. It notes growing demand for property in the area and compares prices with the capital's market. No official action or deadline is involved; the item is of interest mainly for property owners and newcomers watching local real-estate trends.
