Summary

The National Police visited cattle farms in Alanje and Bugaba districts of Chiriqui, using drones for aerial surveillance as part of preventive security work with ranchers, Telemetro reports.

Details (summary of the article)

Telemetro reports that the National Police carried out visits to cattle ranches in the Chiriqui districts of Alanje and Bugaba to coordinate security measures and prevent crimes affecting producers. Officers used drones to get aerial views of the properties and support preventive surveillance. Police said they approached ranchers in both districts to strengthen communication and agree joint prevention measures. The force stressed the value of working with cattle farmers to reinforce security in rural Chiriqui. No arrests or incidents were reported as part of the operation.
