Summary

Cable & Wireless Panamá, which operates the Más Móvil brand used by many Boquete residents, named Guillermo Ponce as interim CEO, replacing Rocío Lorenzo, who is leaving to head Telenet in Belgium.

Details (summary of the article)

The telecoms operator Cable & Wireless Panamá, which trades as Más Móvil, announced a change at the top. Guillermo Ponce, currently a member of its board, becomes interim executive president and general manager, taking over from Rocío Lorenzo, who leaves to become chief executive of Telenet, Liberty Global's Belgian operator; Lorenzo stays on the Panamanian company's board. Balan Nair, CEO of parent group Liberty Latin America, praised Lorenzo's contribution and said Ponce would continue the strategy. Ponce said his priority is to keep momentum and deliver reliable service. Revista E&N notes the company has 29 years in Panama, cumulative investment and contributions of about US$10.6 billion, and is 49% state-owned. For 2026 it is focusing on fibre speeds up to 1,000 Mbps, LTE coverage, its 5G network and cloud services. No change to customer services was announced.
