Summary

La Estrella de Panamá reports that heavy rains in Chiriquí are threatening vegetable production and supply to markets, which could affect availability and prices of produce from the highlands.

Full text (English)

Headline from La Estrella de Panamá (14 October 2026): rains in Chiriquí are threatening the supply of vegetables to the market. Chiriquí's highlands, close to Boquete, are the country's main vegetable-growing area, so prolonged rain damages crops and can reduce supply and raise prices. No further detail was available in the item beyond the headline.
