Details (summary of the article)

TVN Panamá reports that four families, 21 people in all, lost the house they shared in Lajas Adentro, in the Chiriquí district of San Félix, when it collapsed in the 9 October earthquake. Everyone escaped unhurt before the structure came down, but they have since been crowded into temporary shelters provided to them. The Ministry of Housing says three new houses are being built that will give the families better and safer living conditions. One resident appealed for the work to be done quickly, especially for the children's sake, and asked that the homes be well built, saying fear of another tremor remains. The families hope to leave the provisional accommodation as soon as construction finishes.
