Summary

Folklore promoter Carlos Del Cid, active in Boquete, says lack of steady support is the main challenge for Panamanian folklore and calls for firmer public and private backing.

Details (summary of the article)

Metro Libre carries a short piece on Carlos Del Cid, who promotes Panamanian folklore in Boquete. He argues the biggest obstacle facing traditional culture is the absence of permanent support, saying culture often does not get the value it deserves and that organisers must go out hunting for backing when commitment should exist from the start. He believes stronger public and private support would allow cultural projects from Boquete to grow to national and international scale. The item gives no dates for specific performances.
